Attention:

Dear [Redacted]

We have made an honest effort to contact the various groups in Washington to see who would have a possible interest in your process as you requested in your earlier letter. Unfortunately, we did not necessarily receive feedback from these people as to whether or not they contacted you; therefore, we have no way of knowing whether these people have indicated to you an interest in this process.

On our own front we have delayed continuing our experiments due to a rush of other contracting and development and, therefore, have not been able to continue our experimentation in the field of emulsions. Truthfully, at this time it does not seem that we shall begin again on this type of work in the near future. However, if we do, your process will certainly be considered as one of the participants. Perhaps we will be able to solve some of the problems that we had in the past concerning the security of your process, our lack of knowledge of it, and develop more fully our particular areas of interest at some future date.

That is all for the present. We certainly thank you for your cooperation, and we are sorry that we cannot continue our experimentation at this time.

Very sincerely yours,
